10 SIGNS YOU'VE FOUND PRODUCT-MARKET FIT

Customers Pull, You Don't Push

When you have PMF, customers find you.
No need to push—demand pulls.

Dropbox's demo video grew their waitlist from 5,000 to 75,000 overnight, with no ads. Just pure excitement.

Your Users Become Your Sales Team

Users sell your product for you—sharing, recommending, defending it. Your challenge? Keeping up with demand.

Zoom hit 1M users in 2016 with no marketing budget, just word-of-mouth love.

Users Stay and Grow

Your retention flattens after 2-3 months—users stay and grow their usage.

Slack's PMF showed when teams didn't just stay; they sent more messages each month, turning power users into champions.

The Disappointment Test

Ask users: "How would you feel if you couldn't use our product?" If over 40% say "very disappointed," you've hit PMF.

Superhuman hit PMF with 58% "very disappointed" responses—now valued at $1B+.

Sales Become "Easy"

Sales cycles get shorter, budgets are found, and pricing power increases. Deals close quickly with little effort.

MongoDB’s sales cycle dropped from 6+ months to just 30 days when they found PMF—customers came pre-convinced.

Support Questions Change

Questions shift from "how do I use this?" to "can I do more with this?" Users start suggesting features instead of reporting basic issues.

Notion users started building templates and creating YouTube tutorials. Support became about possibilities, not problems.

The Market Speaks

Competitors start copying you. Industry analysts seek you out. Partnership opportunities flood in. Your approach becomes "the way" to solve the problem.

When Airbnb hit PMF, hotels started creating their own home-sharing services. The market validated their model by copying it.

Internal Clarity

Your team stops debating core features. Everyone understands the customer. Product decisions become clearer. Growth feels more predictable.

Stripe's team found such clarity that they maintained the same API design for years. They knew exactly what developers needed.

When you hit Product-Market Fit, you'll know.

The question changes from:
"How do we get people to use this?"

To: "How do we keep up with demand?"

PMF isn't binary—it's a spectrum.

You can achieve it in segments before the full market.
It must be maintained, as it can be lost.
PMF signals vary across businesses.
Prioritize trends over exact numbers.
Always consider your specific market context.

Product-Market Fit Essentials

Product-Market Fit is key.

With it: Customers find you, sales flow, growth is effortless.

Without it: Every step is an uphill struggle.

Remember

The key is to look for multiple confirming signals across different areas rather than focusing on any single metric. When you have PMF, it becomes obvious - the market pulls the product out of the startup rather than the startup pushing the product into the market.

PLAIN LANGUAGE

2024 / SEPTEMBER

Attribution - NoDerivs

BURAK BUYUKDEMIR

10 SIGNS YOU'VE FOUND PRODUCT-MARKET FIT